Teacher Scholarships Increase

Since 1947, the number of scholarships made available for public school teaching in Virginia has increased almost ten times and funds for the program have more than doubled, the State Department of Education said today.

In 1947-48, the first year that money was provided for teaching scholarships, 320 were approved. In that year, $320,000 was available for the program. During the current fiscal year, 2,901 scholarships have been paid and funds available for the program, including a deficit authorization of $85,500 approved by the Governor, total $721,500.

"The number of applicants for the current year has definitely exceeded our expectations," said Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. "With the exception of improvements in teachers' salaries, the scholarship program has done more than anything else to alleviate the teacher shortage in Virginia," he said

"Since its beginning in 1947, the Governor and members of the General Assembly have given consistent and unwavered support to this worthwhile program."

The scholarship loans are available to Virginia students who are studying in Virginia colleges and preparing to become teachers, and to teachers who study in summer school sessions in Virginia colleges for the purpose of improving their qualifications for teaching.

As of last June, 14,350 of all scholarships issued had been cancelled by teaching; 1,560 by cash repayments; and 314 by combined teaching and cash repayments.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"Sizing-up" the Situation

When a lady in our town's looking for a new dress . . . her first target is Sandy Philip's shop. The other day I finally asked Sandy how come he's been so successful.

"Well," Sandy said, "I've always treated my customers with courtesy. And my secret ingredient—which isn't really a secret—is flattery.

"Whenever a new shipment of dresses comes in, I cut off the size markers in every dress —and make them a size smaller. Size 16 becomes size 14 and so on. Course, all the ladies know I change the number—but they like it. Helps them pretend their figures are a little better than they really are."

From where I sit, we all like to think the best of ourselves —often "shrink" the truth to do it. Reminds me of people who claim they're not prejudiced then turn around and argue against a neighbor's choice of a glass of beer. Even a little intolerance is too much in a person or in a town—and that's exactly the size of it.

Winners In CornSilageClub

Final calculations have been made to determine yiels of corn silage on those farms that participated in the 20-ton per acre corn silage club.

C. F. Moore was in first place with 20.49 tons per acre; J. W. Smith was second with 17.85 tons, and H. C. Pulliam was third with 14.60 tons per acre.

Corn silage is the cheapest source of roughage that is fed to animals during the winter months. Also, it can be an important source of food during periods of dry weather. More cattlemen, especially those who produce manufactured milk, and beef should consider this relatively cheap source of feed.

According to the agricultural census of 1955, the average yield of silage in Appomattox County was 8.9 tons per acre.

BE SURE TO PLOW UP TOBACCO STALKS

It's on the late-ish side — but if you haven't already plowed up tobacco stubble, do so now!

That's the advice from S. B. Fenne, plant pathologist at VPI. He says one of the most important steps in the control of nemadotes that attack tobacco is to plow up all tobacco stubble, exposing the roots to the sun and drying winds.

Do not plow under the stubble, because the roots will stay wet and nemadotes will not be killed.

The plowed-up stubble should remain exposed to sun and wind about a week. Then run a light drag harrow over the stubble to knock off the soil and turn over the roots to give more complete nemadote control. After harrowing, the stubble should remain exposed for another week if possible, and then the field prepared for a cover crop.

Rye, oats, and fescue are good to use as cover crops since they are not as badly affected by certain types of nemadotes as are other plants.

Change In Rule For Vet Fees

Beginning December 1, farmers will have to start paying veterinarians out of their own pocket for calfhood vaccination under the Federal-State Accelerated Brucelossis program, the State Department of Agriculture announced today.

Free testing of cattle and indemnity payments to owners of infected animals will be continued at least through June 30, according to Dr. W. I. Bendix, State Vetinarian. The Department will continue to provide the vaccine without charge.

A 30 per cent cut in Va.'s allocation of Federal funds to wipe out the disease gave the Department a choice between cutting off veterinary fees for vaccinating calves or risk running out of money for county by county testing of cattle and slaughter of infected animals, Dr. Bendix said.

Since the accelerated program started in November, 1957, a total of 58 Virginia counties have been declared free of the disease and 25 others are under test. Just short of 100,000 Virginia calves were vaccinated against the disease during the last fiscal year.

The National Association of State Departments of Agriculture and other farm groups have petitioned the Congress to restore early next year the $3,500,000 cut made this year in Federal funds for the accelerated program.

Appomattox cattle owners who desire to have calves vaccinated at no cost, should arrange to do so before December 1st.
